THE TRUTH GAME (NC)

Simon Rumley

The Truth Game is an ultra-low-budget Britflick set in one flat during a dinner party thrown by a young couple for their friends. It takes the bold risk of making most of the characters somewhat unlikeable tossers, but at least it produces good drama as they proceed to slice strips off each other, bicker incessantly and cop off with each other upstairs. Director-writer Simon Rumley has a great ear for dialogue, particularly for nimble, waltzing arguments of warring couples and, despite the restriction of the setting, injects drama into the whole with inventive camera work. Definitely one to watch out for. All films open July 27.
